JACOB HOFENBREDL TRUCKING

Jacob Hofenbredl purchased a 2004 378 Peterbilt after spending many years in the woods and hauling logs for a year. Hofenbredl has logging in his blood as his grandfather, uncle and father all worked or work in the industry. "It's kind of a thing for guys my age, it seems like people running the loader want to drive truck and people driving truck want to run loader," Jacob said. "I really just wanted to do everything in the industry."

DALLAS OREGON

Part of the Salem, Oregon metropolitan area, Dallas is the county seat of Polk County and has 14,500 people. It was first settled in the 1840s and really boomed when a railroad was put through town. Now the town has vineyards and wineries along with several parks. The town also holds events such as Summerfest, Bounty Market and Winterfest.

If you've heard of Hofenbredl before, it's because in Northwestern Oregon there is Hofenbredl Logging, Hofenbredl Timber and Hofenbredl Trucking. Jacob's late grand-

"I've just been surrounded by it," Jacob said. "I worked at my grandpa's [Larry Sr.] shop and always wanted to end up in truck."

Based out of Dallas, Oregon

Jacob has taken the leap as a new owner-operator of Jacob Hofenbredl Trucking LLC. He isn't a stranger to log trucks at all, but said he had to get acclimated as a business owner.

Hofenbredl

Hofenbredl was exposed to the woods at an early age, and worked in his grandpa's shop during high school and when he graduated in 2006. It was there where he learned about trucks inside and out, repairing transmissions, doing engine work and working on rear ends and clutches. He worked in the shop some more before running equipment for his uncle Larry's company Hofenbredl Timber in 2009. He operated both a processor and a loader for the company.

"It's kind of a thing for guys my age, it seems like people running the loader want to drive truck and people driving truck want to run loader," Jacob said. "I really just wanted to do everything in the industry."

Hofenbredl said he learned the "tricks of the trade" about the industry from his grandpa and his dad Kevin. Both Larry Jr. and Kevin began logging when they were 18 years old. Larry started his own logging company in 1988. Kevin went to help Jacob's grandpa with the log trucking in 2000 and helps with the dispatching for Hofenbredl Logging while also owning his own truck.

While Larry Sr. passed away in February of 2015, his company still lives on as his wife Priscilla Hofenbredl still owns and operates the business with Kevin helping out with the trucking. When Jacob expressed interest in driving truck, he drove a company truck - 2004 378 Peterbilt - with a quickchange to a low-boy and Whitlog bunk gear.

"I learned a lot about log trucking this past year," Hofenbredl said. "It was one of the worst winters we've had and I was kind of thrown into it."

Jacob said he saw the other side of the industry where if the logging side didn't go to work because of too much snow, that meant the log truckers didn't go to work and visa versa. Being on the road was something that real-

This lineup of shiny trucks is only part of the attendees at the Truck Parts Sales, Inc.'s Annual Truck Show. The show was held July 22, 2017 and had a good attendance.

RIGHT: The King Agriculture Museum in Centralia, WA brought out a nice display of antique tractors

Dustin Hines standing beside his Peterbilt Cabover log truck. You'll probably see Dustin's operation featured in an upcoming issue of Log Trucker Magazine.

RIGHT: Lewis County District 6 Chief Kinder is doing a little recruiting for the future. Great Public Relations for the department!

Lewis County Sheriff's Department brought their SWAT vehicle to the show. Mark Anders is explaining the finer points of this massive vehicle to an interested group of possible future recruits.

Northwestern Logistics LLC of Rochester WA brought out their beautiful black Peterbilt. Lots of detail on this one including more pinstriping by the talented Alisha Jennings of Spanaway, WA.

ly stuck with Hofenbredl - who had always known how to drive truck but learned how to have the truck work and make money for the company.

"You learn that every load counts," Hofenbredl said.

When the year was up, Kevin was able to co-sign with Jacob and he purchased the 378 Peterbilt from Hofenbredl Logging. After some minor adjustments and the proper paperwork, Jacob is now an independent driver.

"I'm pushing to see where this goes and how the industry does," Jacob said. "I also get to work alongside my dad and not many people can say that they get to see their dad at work everyday."

Going from a company driver meant that Jacob became aware of how the truck has to make money on a daily basis to stay afloat. Downtime and repairs cut into margins, as opposed to a company driver who isn't responsible for the bottom line. Hofenbredl is now in control of his own destiny, so to speak.

"I'm fully committed now," Jacob said. "I also have a lot of people in my corner. Buying the truck from my grandma meant I still had a haul with the truck."

Still making the leap wasn't easy, but Hofenbredl's goal was also to work for himself. He now hauls loads for Hofenbredl Timber in the NW Oregon area. Jacob hauls anywhere from Tillamook to Dallas, going to Hampton, Stimson, and some Weyco mills in Oregon.

"I just like working alone everyday and it's a different challenge every time up," Hofenbredl said. "It's not the same old every time."

Along with log trucking, Jacob and his wife Breanna have two children Bella and Lane.

With friend Bridger Hasbrouck, Jacob helped start the Facebook page called "Men of The Woods: A loggers life" which has over 32,000 members and is one of the fastest growing logging pages on Facebook.

Hofenbredl doesn't mind getting up at two in the morning to go to work, and enjoys carrying on his father's legacy out in the woods. As a third generation Hofenbredl behind the wheel, it looks like the family name is going to stick around longer in the NW corner of Oregon.

GETTING STARTED

Hofenbredl was exposed to the woods at an early age, and worked in his grandpa's shop during high school and when he graduated in 2006. It was there where he learned about trucks inside and out, repairing transmissions, doing engine work and working on rear ends and clutches. He worked in the shop some more before running equipment for his uncle Larry's company Hofenbredl Timber in 2009. He operated both a processor and a loader for the company.

LEARNING HOW IT WORKS

Jacob said he saw the other side of the industry where if the logging side didn't go to work because of too much snow, that meant the log truckers didn't go to work and visa versa.

Being on the road was something that really stuck with Hofendredl - who had always known how to drive truck but learned how to have the truck work and make money for the company.

IT'S IN THE NAME

If you've heard of Hofenbredl before, it's because in Northwestern Oregon there is Hofenbredl Logging, Hofenbredl Timber and Hofenbredl Trucking.

Jacob's late grandpa, his father and his uncle have their own logging businesses and there's many more in his family that also log or drive truck.
